3. ANTIGOVERNMENT DEMONSTRATIONS SPREADING IN IRAQ

Antigovernment and pro-Nasr demonstrations in Baghdad, which were touched off by the Anglo-French intervention in Egypt, have now spread to other sections of Iraq. The government has reinforced military units around the city and moved troops south to support local police. Baghdad radio announced on 30 November that martial law had been proclaimed in four northern provinces.

A change of prime ministers reportedly is under discussion in Baghdad. Since no former prime minister appears willing to assume the liabilities of Nuri's pro-British policies, the palace may try to ride out the storm with Nuri Said. Crown Prince Abdul Illah told Ambassador Gallman on 26 November that even if Nuri were replaced, there would be no change in foreign policy. He said membership in the Baghdad pact should be maintained as well as close relations with the West.

The Iraqi government has the police power available to control antigovernment demonstrations. The American army attaché reports that the Iraqi air force has been "buzzing" Baghdad with jet planes for several days, probably to intimidate the populace against further demonstrations.

4. BRITAIN MAY LOAN JET FIGHTERS TO LEBANON

The British embassy in Beirut has recommended to London that 12 Hunter jet fighters be loaned to the Lebanese air force to replace its present seven Vampire jet fighters. The British official who gave this information to the American army attaché in Beirut believes London will approve immediate delivery of the Hunters, and also an increase in the size of the British training mission in Lebanon.

Comment

As a consequence of recent developments in Syria and Jordan, the British are anxious to strengthen Lebanon's military position and to improve their relations with Beirut. The proposed "loan" of jet fighters would be in addition to the recent delivery of 300 rifles and 3,000,000 rounds of ammunition. Tanks are reportedly also awaiting shipment in London, and the British have agreed to supply a total of 500 Sten guns, 500 automatic rifles, and some 17-pounders.

5. USSR DETAINS AMERICAN ARMY TRUCK CONVOY AT BERLIN CHECK POINT

An American army truck convoy returning from West Germany to Berlin which had cleared the East German border check point at Marienborn without difficulty was detained at the check point near Berlin on 29 November, according to a report from the American mission in Berlin. A Soviet lieutenant colonel stated that the vehicles would have to be inspected, and that he had instructions to search vehicles to look for concealed persons. The convoy commander refused to permit inspection. The convoy was finally allowed to pass, but the Soviet officer in charge of the check point stated that in the future convoys would not be permitted to proceed without inspection of the interior of the vehicle.

Comment

Soviet authorities have not been demanding the right to inspect military truck convoys traveling between West Germany and Berlin.

Since the night of 24-25 November, Allied military trains have passed Soviet check points with only short delays upon presentation of Russian translations of travel orders and identity documents.

6. REVOLUTIONARY OUTBREAK IN CUBA

The fighting in Santiago de Cuba, the second largest city in the island republic, on 30 November may have been intended to trigger a full-scale revolutionary attempt against the Batista regime. Participants in the attacks on government buildings included many persons identified with the "26th of July" movement of revolutionary exile Fidel Castro, who has been actively plotting against President Batista for some time. The Cuban army claims to have the situation under control, although uprisings in other areas have been rumored. [REDACTED]

all military and police are on alert, and authorities are expecting a landing attempt by revolutionaries.

While it appears that Batista retains the loyalty of a majority of the armed forces, there have been reports of dissatisfaction and plotting, particularly within the army, a key factor in the situation.

7. POLES READY TO NEGOTIATE US AID

Polish deputy foreign minister Winiewicz on 29 November told American ambassador Jacobs that his government was prepared to send experts to the United States in the near future to discuss economic aid. He stressed again that Poland was unwilling to accept any American "controllers or advisers" in relation to aid, though this did not preclude investigation of Polish capabilities to repay purely commercial loans.

Winiewicz added that the experts to be dispatched to Washington would also like to discuss with officials of the International Bank and the International Monetary Fund the possibility of Polish membership.

Comment. Winiewicz had told Jacobs on 13 November that Poland was interested primarily in receiving short-term credits (two to five years) from the United States for the purchase of grains, fats, and oils, cotton, fertilizer, and coal mining machinery.

The Kremlin reportedly agreed during the Moscow discussions with Gomulka that Poland might seek aid from the West.

8. EAST GERMAN PARTY NEWSPAPER ATTACKS POLISH WRITER FOR IDEOLOGICAL ERRORS

The East German party newspaper Neues Deutschland bitterly attacked Polish writer Edda Werfel on 27 November for her recent article in praise of the Polish road to socialism.

Her article was attacked for holding up the Polish "revolution of 1956" as a model for all brother parties, and representing it as beginning a "new period in the international workers' movement." The paper also accused Werfel of associating herself with those who wish to slander the Soviet Union by identifying the personality cult with the Soviet system, and put her in the same category with Ruth Fischer, Koestler, and "other renegades."

Comment

On 28 November, Moscow radio repeated the East German criticism in its Polish broadcast as a warning to the Poles and others against going too far. This is the first public response by Moscow to the recent spate of Polish articles critical of the USSR.

Gomulka in a speech of 29 November indicated that the Polish regime's attitude is hardening toward the present outspokenness of Polish journalism. He warned against "reactionaries trying to ride the wave of democratization," and said that anyone who opposed the Communist program of socialism is on the "other side of the barricades." Attacks against party members as Stalinists, he said, are in reality attacks against the party.

9. SOUTH KOREA SEEKS MILITARY ALLIANCE WITH NATIONALIST CHINA

Ambassador Rankin in Taipei reports that South Korea has again proposed a military alliance to Nationalist China. As a basis for such an alliance, South Korea requested Nationalist China to agree to consultations on possible simultaneous military action against the Chinese Communists and North Koreans, to press for the abrogation of the Korean armistice, and to adopt an anti-Japanese policy.

A provisional reply by the Nationalists--given even before reference to Chiang Kai-shek--noted that Taipei has no present plans to launch an offensive against the Communists and that it preferred not to link its Korean and Japanese policies. The reply indicated receptiveness, however, to an open military alliance which would take account of obligations to the United States and assured Seoul that Taipei would continue to support its opposition to the armistice agreement.

Comment

An attempt by Taipei to conclude a goodwill treaty with Korea last August fell through when President Rhee included unacceptable conditions. While the Chinese Nationalists share Rhee's distrust of Japan, they have adopted a policy of friendship and co-operation with Tokyo because of the need for its political support and the importance of mutual trade.
